

B. & O. SWITCHMAN AS BOY NOW POSS OF BRITISH NAVY

LONDON, Aug. 1 (By mail).—They used to say that the fastest thing on the B. and O. was the Royal Blue Limited. They were wrong. The fastest thing on the B. and O. was a young hired hand named Eric Geddes. Naturally it wasn't known then, but the appointment of Vice Admiral Sir Eric Geddes—the same young hired hand and not a whole lot older—to be ruler of the British navy ought to prove it.

If the new first lord of the British admiralty had a middle name it would be Speed. If he accomplishes the same results in the admiralty that he has accomplished in other branches of the government this much is certain: British naval officers will cease to marvel at the haste of the American navy; they'll be too busy speeding up their own.

Born in India.
Sir Eric was born in India forty-one years ago. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and Oxford Military College. When seventeen years old he went to America. He worked in Southern lumber camps a bit, then for the Carnegie Steel Company in Pittsburgh and became a switchman and afterwards a station agent on the Baltimore and Ohio in West Virginia. Four years later he left to go back to India.

In India he entered the service of the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway, in the building of a railroad through the jungle, a job that made him something of a reputation. Thirteen years ago Sir George Gibbs, general manager of the Northwestern railway, called him asking if he was prepared to accept a place on the Northeastern.

"Starting Monday," Geddes replied. In a short time he was appointed deputy general manager. Lord Kitchener saw him in 1915 and enlisted his aid in speeding up munitions. When the ministry of munitions was created with Lord George in charge he made Geddes deputy general director. Early in 1916 he was transferred to the war office as director of military railways.

Called on to assist in the preparations for the Somme campaign he was transferred, at Sir Douglas Haig's request, to France as a member of the commander-in-chief's staff, with the title of director general of transportation and the rank of major general.

Lord Peck asked the question of the propriety of replacing a military officer with a civilian. "But," said Lord Derby, "the civilian in this case is Sir Eric Geddes." That settled it. In May of this year it was decided his energy was needed in the admiralty. The post of controller was created, a little job that called for the combined requirements of the admiralty, the war office, the ministry of shipping and other government departments with respect to repairs, construction, alterations and designs of warships and other vessels of all classes and the requirements of the admiralty with respect to armaments and munitions. So he ceased to be a major general and became a vice-admiral.

But Lloyd George came to the conclusion that Sir Eric didn't have enough to do and now has made him first lord and the real "Ruler of the Queen's Navy."

Don Marquis' Column

Most garden truck is welcome, but we make no kick on beetless days.

A lot of grandmothers who are almost as young as their daughters' daughters could tell the War Department a lot about camouflage no doubt.

Every day that the food crooks are permitted to exploit the necessities of the people makes another flock of Socialists.

Several people have written me, quite seriously, inquiring whether the verse published recently in this column, and said by a medium to have been communicated to her in a state of trance, was actually the work of poets dead and gone.

And quite seriously we answer: How is one to know exactly where such things come from? For our part, we shall continue to be skeptical about such things until we have absolutely incontrovertible proof.

But from the same source comes another bit of verse, which we present below. The medium would like to have us believe that it was written by Oscar Wilde.

To Persephone.
As if a chance wind touched with minstrelsy
Some broken lute again, so hath a breath
Wrought music from my soul that languisheth.

One final cadence fraught with agony,
A breath, a breath: thy name, Persephone.
Doth mingle with the grief it quickens
Thy name, O mistress of the realms of death!

Settles desolation into tune for me.
Once the wild raptures and the beating wings
Of song were mine, the sun, the climbing flight;
I falter now, he always falls who sings!

Shatter! I creep out of the cruel light.
Persephone, in thy dim twilight glades
Another shadow joins the silent shades.

The Beehive.
Each bee has not an individual soul.
This I believe, but there
A spirit breathes that animates the whole.

The beehive hums. The beehive fills
With music like the music of the stars
And like the music that the world will make
When hearts no longer ache and fill
With the swift dreams and turbulence of wars.

I have felt God today: known Him alive
Working His patient will. I heard His voice
In the concerted noise
That swells in vowels from the loam of beehive.

Each individual bee has not a soul,
This I will grant, but there
A spirit breathes that animates the whole.

breasts of some of the editors of German language newspapers will fairly dazzle. If nominations are in order, we herewith nominate the editor of the Deutsche-amerikanische Greterzeitung of Cleveland, Ohio, for every jangling bangle the Kaiser has on his list. For this editor deserves all the Kaiser can give him in appreciation of loyal and devoted services."

The particular job of the German language newspapers in the United States is to stir up ill feeling and in every other way to hamper America's preparations to wage effective war against Germany. Here is a little note from the Deutsche-amerikanische Kreisleitung to show how thoroughly its editor is in the picture.

"There is silliness and a feeling of discomfort in Congress: what one would call discontent, in fact. Some of our legislators, conceivably, and passed in mad haste, is being attacked from various sides, although it has scarcely gone into operation. The explanation of this state of affairs is simple enough. The gentlemen in Congress are not at ease in their doings. They know that they have not got the people behind them. They are dissatisfied with themselves—and they have every reason."

Come with a bangle, Wilhelm!
The Higher Criticism.
Sir: The third "episode"—the opium den scene—in "The Man Who Came Back," came to a haggard close, the curtain was lowered and the lady sitting behind me stirred in her seat.

"From the literary standpoint it's a pretty poor show; but you've got to hand it to the author for appealing to the emotions."

I simply had to look at her. Yes, a hefty cousin of Hermione's. And I chuckled—couldn't help it! She glared at me, and I know her whispering remark to the docile man with her was something like this: "Why does that bourgeois person look at me? Probably doesn't comprehend my remarks; can't grasp the underlying meanings; and the fundamental 'if you get what I mean'! Wonder why he isn't at the movies! So annoying, these persons."

Sir—As a relief from the heat, please be advised that there is something harder to endure. Have just left the originator of the practice of prefacing an alleged humorous anecdote by saying that the story is really very funny.
